Permission to Participate

One of the benefits of a LECS education is that students have opportunities to pursue learning beyond the traditional classroom teaching setting. As is explained on the LECS website: “LECS has a non-textbook curriculum in which resources are pulled from primary source materials, the internet, and practical application exercises. Teachers facilitate learning rather than “pouring it in.” This approach develops ownership on the part of students and fine tunes their critical thinking skills.”

As part of this process, from time to time the LECS teachers may pull small groups of students from their classroom for short periods of time during the school day to participate in a variety of educational activities to support classroom learning. Individual students may also be pulled.

These educational activities may include but are not limited to enrichment, tutoring, remediation, social skills development, leadership development, preparation for competitions, special interest development, service learning, etc.

My signature below indicates that I am aware of this practice and give my child(ren) permission to participate in these activities as scheduled by the school.
